Kalpana Chawla was born on 17th March, 1962. She had her school education at Tagore Balniketan Senior Secondary School in Karnal. As a child she showed signs of her fascination for stars in a model she made and aeroplanes often featured in her drawings.

When she was 11 years old, she had her first flight experience aboard a Pushpak in the Karnal Aviation Club. She was obsessed with the thought of flying a plane ever since then. The terrace of Kalpana's house became her favourite place from where she saw gliders and Pushpak planes fly from aviation club.

After her pre-university education, she opted for aeronautical engineering. And for self protection she learnt karate and became black belt. At the Punjab Engineering College in Chandigarh, she up-dated herself on her favourite subjects. In 1982 she passed out as the first aeronautical engineer of the college. Soon after she taught in the same college till she got admitted to the University of Texas, Arlington. Here, she married a French American flying instructor Jean Pierre Harrison in December, 1983. After completing her post-graduation she enrolled for her Ph.D. in aerospace at the University of Colorado. Simultaneously she took flying lessons from her husband and mastered the skills of aerobatics.

After her Ph.D. in 1988, she did a project for NASA at the MCAT Institute, California. When she was finally selected as an astronaut in aviation at NASA, she saw her dream taking shape. After rigorous training she was chosen to go as prime robotic operator on Mission STS-87 on 19th November, 1997. The team returned after a successful stint in space on 5th December 1997.

She was again chosen for Mission STS-107 with six others. Tragically just 16 minutes before their space shuttle was scheduled to land on earth, it exploded in the atmosphere over the state of Texas, ironically where her journey in the U.S. began. All the astronauts were killed instantaneously.

Thus ended the life of this great Indian who literally reached out for the stars.
